

Series Description

This journal series is intended to contribute to the public policy dialogue by providing insightful and in-depth analysis. It will provide rigorous, but accessible, articles for readers concerned about the broad range of developments in international trade. It relies primarily but not exclusively on USITC studies and research on both pressing and emerging issues and strives to foster cross-disciplinary analysis.